Jaicuabt, 1873. MR. CARINGTON. CHAPTER I. THE NOELS OP SAU8BUKY. Laudator temporis acti. SocLETT, even more than political life in England, has been curiously transformed within a century. Those who have read the Malmesbury Correspondence will recollect the delightful letters of Mrs. Harris, wife of the author of Hernus, to her son, the distinguished diplomatist who became first Earl of Malmesbury. Her vivid sketches and witty comments have never been outdone by any lady letter-writer; and lady letter-writers are always the best, provided, as somebody said, they never cross. From her letters, which never attempt to be brilliant, yet are never dull, it is clear, that both London and the country have changed for the worse during the century, so far as the easy gaiety of a sumptuous society is concerned. Both are wealthier :in London there is a vaster concourse of opulent people, who vie with each other in the exhibition of magnificence; but the free simplicity of that time is past when the Lord Chief Justice might be seen at Mrd. Comely s, when cotillons were danced at the Pantheon, when the Tuesday-night Club gave masquerades at A lmack s, when the Savoir Yivre Club had their grand regatta from Blackfriars to Westminster, with dinner at Ranelagh and supper at Yauxhall, when Miss Lloyd started her ladies coffee-room at Boodle s, far cards all day, and especially, too, after eleven oclock supper, and which was so exclusive that the Duchess of Bedford was black-balled; when ladies, instead of filling their houses with a crowd at their evening receptions, stayed at home and let in masques. What would the decorous old gentlemen of Boodle ssay if a yoimg lady of fashion proposed to them a ladies coffee-room in these days tho, serious VOL. XH.
