One-liners - used by everyone from Winston Churchill to Rodney Dangerfield - can be poetic, profound or outrageously funny. A good one-liner may initially appear shallow or silly, but in fact packs a powerful message in deceptively few words. In his book, Mike Turpen offers fifty shades of life in the form of short stories, each woven around a one-liner. Entertaining and humorous, dead serious and sober, these stories offer lessons for living a good, happy life. In everything from nocturnal visits in the White House with President Bill Clinton to Mike's first kiss between the swing set and dog house, Mike will charm you with his high-energy approach to life, law, liberty and the pursuit of happiness.
