This book is a raw and uncensored account of a daughter's first year of grieving for her dead father. It gives the readers a chance to watch a grieving person for a year--written in real time--it is not a book "looking back" on a year of grieving and perhaps misinterpreting the realities of it; nor is it a book telling the reader "this is what's going to happen." It is reality--written as it was experienced.

It is about a plethora of subjects and topical issues for discussion: adults burying parents; family dynamics in grief situations; hospitals; open adoption and its effects; small town life... and much more.

It is set in a small town, yet has universal appeal.

It is non-fiction, yet reads like a novel.

It is about grieving, yet causes the reader to laugh.

It is resonating with her personal faith, yet does not preach nor condemn.

It is a book celebrating the agony of grief.

It is a book not soon forgotten.

The author writes with an insightful realism that brings tears, laughter, and hope. Her descriptive and colorful writings create a window into the thought process of a person struggling with loss. This is not a scientific study of how to deal with grief, but it is an opportunity to walk with Krisanne on her personal path of questioning, shock, pain, numbness, loneliness, fear, and anger--and in so doing, perhaps see yourself.
