SNOWBOUND (FireFrost Book 1) Brenda L. Harper
Sophie wouldn't call herself the prettiest or most popular girl at brand new Dublin High, but she does have a wickedly sharp tongue and a remarkable talent with paints and canvas.

Never too far from her sketchpad, she can't seem to resist trying to capture the enchanting beauty of a new boy at her school – but thinks she'll surely perish from embarrassment when he catches her in the act. To her surprise, he is impressed with her skill, and even ends up coming over to sit for her.

With such a perfect muse, Sophie's artistic skills develop rapidly, and with such a handsome and charming young man interested in her, it seems like she'll be more than prepared for both the art gallery opening and the Homecoming dance!

But, while her own life skips along, interrupted only by a terrible recurring stomach flu, her town is undergoing some mysterious changes. Snow in a Texas September is unheard of, a terrible fire takes out the end of her block, and there's something whispering in the shadows…

Her friends warn her away from her captivating new love interest, saying he is dark, cold, dangerous – but his touch is too electric to pull away, even when it's clear that he is not what he seems...perhaps not even human.
