Sealing a deal with Heaven is as dangerous as starting a war with Hell.

Rhiannan's Law, Book 3

Rhiannon Murphy's homecoming party from a hellish future is more like a violation of her mind, the mining of her memories by her vampire lover, Disco. Now he knows everything that transpired—and her personal life is in shambles.

Yet she has no choice but to push on to sever her debt to Marigold Vesta, the fallen angel who helped her return to her own time. Unfortunately this debt has a short due date, and failing to resurrect Marigold's soul means Rhiannon must sacrifice her own body—or find a suitable substitute.

Then death comes knocking at Rhiannon's door. Disco's maker is in New York with a bone to pick—preferably hers—but he's not the only one out for her blood. Revenald, Marius's half-demon creator, is out to bring her to her knees.

Cornered, Rhiannon must turn once again to the fallen angel whose soul she's trying to save. The penalties may be more than she can bear, but with nothing left to lose, it's no longer about life or death.

It's about getting even.
